

CRUEL WAR'S OVER; ATTACKING ARMY'S TAKEN BY ONE COP

Italian Infantry, After Bombarding Boats, Is Comfortable in Cell, Thank You.

Stanista Donda, of the Royal Infantry Reserves of Italy, declared war on the torpedo boat division of the North Atlantic fleet of the United States Navy early to-day. He bombarded the torpedo boats anchored off Seventy-ninth street in the Hudson until his ammunition was exhausted. There are a lot of dents in the armor of the torpedo boats, but there were no casualties. Stanista Donda is in a cell of the West Side Court charged with having a revolver in his possession.

The whole awful war was caused by a difference of opinion between Signor Donda and the sailors of the torpedo boat. As to his sense of humor, Signor Donda got a temporary permit for a fruit stand on the water front during the assembly of the North Atlantic fleet a month ago. When the treaty of peace between victorious Italy and the Turks was signed Donda made his stand in bloom with all the variations of the Italian flag which he could buy or sew together.

The Yankee bluejackets thought Signor Donda's patriotism was a joke. They gathered in front of his stand in groups of scores and made uncomplimentary remarks. Cheap meritment prevailed at Signor Donda's expense, from the time he rose in the morning until the last soldier waved his way across the landing stage and fell into a boat after midnight.

Signor Donda brooded. He boiled inwardly. He took the contents of his cash drawer yesterday afternoon and went down to Mulberry street and persuaded a compatriot to violate the law by selling him two ten-shot automatic pistols.

Just after midnight this morning, when the last power dory had taken its load of loaded bluejackets to their ships, Signor Donda, his long, wavy black hair bristling with rage and his brand-like moustache floating past his ears, quivering with murderous nervousness, slunk out to the string piece, lay in the gravel and slighted both weapons on the dark shapes which were the homes of his tormentors.

"Bang-bang-bing-pop-bang" barked first the right hand and then the left hand gun. There was a great scurrying on the decks and yells of anger and fright. Sharp commands echoed from the officers.

"Bang-bang-bing-pop-bang" spoke the Donda artillery relentlessly. The battle was short. Thenceforth took to its hatches at once. By the time Signor Donda had emptied his first magazines every sailor of the flotilla was below decks and very silent. Nobody wanted to draw his particular attention.

Lights glowed up in the windows of the apartment houses along Riverside Drive. There were shouted alarms that the sailors of the fleet were murdering each other. Police whistles whirled from fixed post to fixed post. Policeman Loyo, panting after a long run down the Seventy-ninth street hill, rushed across the plaza, took Signor Donda by the scruff of the neck and marched him away to the West Sixty-eighth street station. The cruel war was over, but the commander of the flotilla has issued strict orders that uniformed men shall refrain from exchanging reports hereafter with foreign born citizens along the water front.

Oculation Conjugation.
(From the London Chronicle.)
Sam Slick once said that kisses were like conjugation, made out of nothing, and very good; and another American writer thus conjugated the verb "to kiss":
"Buss, to kiss; rebuss, to kiss again; pluribus, to kiss without regard to numbers; syllabus, to kiss the hands instead of the lips; blunderbuss, to kiss the wrong person; rebuss, to kiss in the dark; omnibus, to kiss every one in the room."
